Dear Jean:

Alice and I remember with great sympathy the most lovely girl we known at London who is to us the symbol of all the charm and beautifulness of the English women.

After our return we had not received any news about Diego or you and we are very interested in continuing our friendship with both of you.

I prefer to write to you because as Diego was going to do some travels this summer I don't know if he has made them or not.

We always dream of the day in which my wife and I shall walk at Santiago's streets with Diego and you. We don't think we shall be so good spanish teachers as you were english professors.

You know chilians are very curious and so you will understand the interest we have to know if your mutual affection has been fortified or has dissapeared. The first possibility is our great desire.

If you'll see Diego, please tell him I have not received Churchill's Memories. I'm afraid they had lost. I would prefer that he had forgotten to send them to me. I also would prefer to stare on you instead of troubling me with book's "affairs".

To your mother our kindly regards. To you and Diego the best wishes from Alice and
